Firedance

Raku firing is a low-fire process: the target temperatures are the same as electric ^06 firing. Expand your palette with glazes made for electric firing! Some will work better than others. Experiment and have fun!

The facing side of this clover vase was glazed with Duncan AG409 Jade Haze Artisan Glaze, and fired in a Raku Kiln with reduction using newspaper and red cedar shavings.

GEORGIES RAKU GLAZES

No other firing technique offers the excitement, immediacy and drama of the raku firing process! Raku glazes produce a variety of color effects depending on firing and reduction techniques. The reduction process is absolutely necessary for these color results: you cannot get them from firing in an electric kiln. Your results will vary depending on environmental and firing variables (including combustible materials used). The color samples show only some of the possibilities. Use a 60 mesh screen if needed.

– Raku pieces are for decorative purposes only – and should never be considered foodsafe or watertight.
